She also interned at Aetna and Cigna, gaining experience in underwriting and actuarial science within the health insurance industry.

“I decided to become a financial advisor when I saw the way that I could help individuals and families with something as personal and complex as their financial matters. I love working in a career where I can enable others to achieve their goals, whether that’s reaching financial independence, planning for college or a home purchase, or simply guiding them to make the most of their resources.”

Lindsey and her husband Nick currently reside in Doylestown, PA. They enjoy cooking, exercising, and spending time with their friends, family, and church community.
